Workplace

Hide and seek | Herman Miller, a renowned manufacturer of office furniture and equipment, is predicting that, in the current economic climate, we are going to see corporations looking at ways to improve efficiency and make the best use of smaller offices by adopting the latest technology and re-thinking the established styles of workplace and the systems used.

Against this background, Herman Miller, in collaboration with specialist design consultants BroomeJenkins, has developed a new storage range called Cubix, which takes a fresh approach to organisation in the workstation. "Encouraged by Herman Miller's brief, the project explored themes around personal space and territory, flexibility, placement and the need for personal control," explains Barry Jenkins, director of BroomeJenkins. "The result is a compact, flexible and modern system designed to manage human and technological needs together without compromising each other."
